EDINBURG, TEXAS: STREAMLINING ZONING REGULATIONS AND MORE WITH ENCODEPLUS AND KENDIG KEAST COLLABORATIVE

The city of Edinburg in south Texas has been working with members of Kendig Keast Collaborative since 2004, when they contracted with Lane Kendig, Inc. to review their existing ordinance documents and create a Comprehensive Plan. Later, in 2007, they utilized a new software called enCodePlus to consolidate their existing planning and zoning regulations into a Unified Development Code (UDC). Hosting the UDC project in enCodePlus allowed city staff to draft the UDC, publish the adopted version, and display their code online.

In 2021, Kendig Keast Collaborative and enCodePlus stepped in again to help the city update the UDC. As part of the update process, Edinburg’s portal received new branding, a new homepage layout, and an updated document design. The updated code was adopted in 2022 along with features including a search function, hyperlinked internal cross-references, and pop-up definitions. In addition, the portal utilizes the Quick Tables feature to direct users to important regulatory tables and the Quick Links feature to provide access to related documents and links to other supplemental information on the city’s official government site.

Edinburg looks forward to future growth with enCodePlus and Kendig Keast Collaborative. Plans include drafting an update to the Comprehensive Plan and creating an Interactive Summary that will guide users through both the Comprehensive Plan and Unified Development Code.

Edinburg, TX has been a Kendig Keast Collaborative client for 20 years.
